Everton v Liverpool
Everton welcome their friends across the park on Saturday lunchtime in the first Merseyside derby of the season. The Toffees were without loss since their 1-0 home defeat to QPR six weeks ago only to have their run scotched by Manchester City last weekend. Liverpool however have been unconvincing away from home conceding five in three league outings on the road so far.

Blackburn Rovers v Manchester City
If you have to face tough opposition then you want to face it when they're down and this week might well be the best week of the year for Blackburn to take on Manchester City. Following a 2-0 Champions League defeat and dressing room trouble City might be at their most vulnerable so Blackburn will remember their 4-3 defeat of Arsenal two weeks ago and will doubtless draw from that.

Tottenham Hotspur v Arsenal
Tottenham host North London neighbours Arsenal at White Hart Lane in the first collision of the season. For the visitors it can be seen that they can fire the goals in but their leaky defence is what's seen them dip into the bottom half for their worst start to a season in a generation. Spurs however are without loss domestically since an early season 5-1 hammering by Man City a month ago.

England v Scotland
England face Scotland in their final hurdle before the quarter finals but despite this this cross-border confrontation requires no introduction. Scotland need this to avoid a pre-quarter final exit for the time in their World Cup history so motivations will be high. England however have failed to demonstrate true quality so far therefore Scotland will have it all to play for.

Featured LTO Review This Week

It's time to re-visit Magic Racing Bot. This was launched with a big public fanfare. But how has it done in our review period, which has been running for over 70 days? At the time of writing this, it was showing a profit of over 57 points on a 75 point starting bank. That is over 76% profit. Currently sales of this bot are suspended, but at the conclusion of our review, the publishers will re-open sales to our readers.
